HIS 660: Introduction to Public History

Center: Online

Course Prerequisites

HIS 501 and HIS 502

Course Description

Unlike many other areas of history, public history distinguishes itself in its application focus and community orientation. Public historians are charged with protecting our historically significant artifacts, cataloging our historical wisdom, and communicating our cultural narratives. In this course, the foundational principles and mission of public history are investigated and evaluated. Students assess the landscape of public history, including the major thinkers, controversies, emerging trends, and ethical demands. Finally, students must articulate a distinct identity for public history and situate themselves within that context.

Course Outcomes

- Analyze historical scholarship on the development of the field of public history and its role in shaping the current state of the profession
- Debate the current state of the public history profession with respect to accountability, transparency, and integrity, substantiated by historical scholarship
- Assess how trends in historical scholarship impact the role public historians play as curators or keepers of collective memory and recipients of public trust
- Assess gaps in the study of public history to develop one's own expertise in a given content area and establish a disciplinary position within the field
- Recommend areas of study to engage public historians in furthering the mission of public history

Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion

As indicated in our core values, SNHU is committed to “embrace diversity where we encourage and respect diverse identities, ideas, and perspectives by honoring difference, amplifying belonging, engaging civilly, and breaking down barriers to bring our mission to life.”

This may or will be reflected in SNHU’s curriculum as we embrace and practice diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) to provide the most transformative experience for our students, faculty, and staff. Because topics pertaining to DEI can be sensitive, please remember that embodying and practicing diversity, equity, and inclusion is one of our core values that you will encounter throughout the academic experience. In higher education, we are expected to think and engage critically. Use a growth mindset to embrace the diverse readings, course assignments, and experiences of your peers and faculty.
